

Quartz That Looks Like Marble: What Are the Best Options Available?

Table of Contents

Why is Quartz Desirable?

How is Quartz Engineered?

What Are Some Quartz Options That Look Like Marble?

Vena Calacatta Infinita Quartz

Calacatta Quartz

Vena Statuario Bianco Quartz

5111 Statuario Nuvo Caesarstone Quartz

Caldera Caesarstone Quartz

5143 White Attica Caesarstone Quartz

5031 Statuario Maximus Caesarstone Quartz

Summary of Appearance

Marble is an incredible natural stone that is among the most desired materials in the world. Marble is often used in the home for structures such as kitchen countertops, bathroom countertops, backsplashes and more. However, while marble is very attractive, it requires much more maintenance than the engineered stone quartz. Quartz has risen in popularity as a countertop option because of its high-quality looks and easy maintenance. When searching for options, you can easily find quartz that looks like marble. This guide will help walk you through everything you need to know about finding quartz that has a marble look.

Why is Quartz Desirable?

There is a good reason that quartz countertops are a very popular option for homes. While marble holds the classic appeal of natural stone, quartz offers a surface that is easier to take care of. Because quartz is engineered, it is non-porous, meaning you will not have to seal it the way you need to with marble or many other natural stones. Quartz is a near indestructible surface, which makes it a great option for any home. However, one thing to note is that you should not expose your quartz countertop to excessive heat, as doing so can cause significant damages. Other than that, there are no additional negative factors when it comes to maintenance.

How is Quartz Engineered?

Quartz is engineered by combining roughly 90 percent quartz mineral with around 10 percent resins and pigments. The exact percentages will vary slightly based on the specific brand but will always be around the same area.

What Are Some Quartz Options That Look Like Marble?

Perhaps you like the elegant veining of a beautiful white marble like Calacatta, but do not want to deal with the maintenance marble requires. Luckily, there are some excellent quartz options that can resemble various types of marble.

Vena Calacatta Infinita Quartz

This beautiful white quartz surface features gorgeous veining that resembles Calacatta marble. If you are looking for quartz that has a marble look, Vena Calacatta Infinita Quartz is a fantastic choice.

Calacatta Quartz

This beautiful quartz can easily be mistaken for marble because of its elegant color and veining. Calacatta Quartz is a great alternative to marble.

Vena Statuario Bianco Quartz

Vena Statuario Bianco Quartz is an amazing quartz option that features wonderful veining that is reminiscent of marble. If you want quartz countertops, backsplashes, vanity tops or other surfaces that look like marble, Vena Statuario Bianco Quartz is one of your top options.

5111 Statuario Nuvo Caesarstone Quartz

Another beautiful quartz option that resembles marble is 5111 Statuario Nuvo Caesarstone Quartz. This gorgeous quartz features light grey veining.

Caldera Caesarstone Quartz

While white marble is extremely popular, there are also many beautiful types of dark marble. If you are looking for a quartz countertop or other surface that looks like dark marble, Caldera Caesarstone Quartz is a great option. The engineered stone is dark brown and has light beige and brown veining.

5143 White Attica Caesarstone Quartz

If you are looking for quartz that resembles marble, 5143 White Attica Caesarstone Quartz is another terrific option. This quartz is white with beautiful grey veins.

5031 Statuario Maximus Caesarstone Quartz

5031 Statuario Maximus Caesarstone Quartz is a great choice for quartz that looks like marble. This quartz is white with stylish dark grey veining.

Summary of Appearance

The table below summarizes the appearance details of the options listed above.

| | |
|---|---|
| Vena Calacatta Infinita Quartz | White with grey veins |
| Calacatta Quartz | White with grey veins |
| Vena Statuario Bianco Quartz | White with grey veins |
| 5111 Statuario Nuvo Caesarstone Quartz | White with light grey veins |
| Caldera Caesarstone Quartz | Dark brown with light beige and brown veins |
| White Attica Caesarstone Quartz | White with grey veins |
| 5031 Statuario Maximus Caesarstone Quartz | White with dark grey veins |

The beautiful options above show that you do not need natural marble to achieve the marble look. Quartz is a stunning low maintenance option that is among the best materials you can choose for your countertops, backsplashes, vanity tops or other home structures.

While marble has long been a material of choice for homeowners, quartz is a popular choice too. Many homeowners desire the appearance of marble but do not want to worry about the hassle of frequent maintenance. Since marble is a natural stone and is porous, it requires sealing. While the frequency will vary based upon the type of stone, you will have to re-seal marble once every few months. You will also need to make sure that you prevent any acidic spills. Spilling acidic substances, such as coffee, juice or soda, on a marble countertop can cause irreversible damages.

If you are looking for quartz that resembles marble, you have plenty of great options to choose from. This guide will help give you the information you need to make a decision.