Granite is one of the top natural stone choices for homeowners. While the stone is mostly used for countertops, backsplashes and vanity tops, granite walls are a terrific addition in a home. Whether you opt for stone tiles or a stone slab, stone walls make a significant visual impact in the house. While other stones such as marble and travertine are also used, granite is one of the most commonly utilized stones for interior walls. If you are thinking about installing a granite slab or granite tiles for your shower walls or other walls in the house, this guide will walk you through everything you need to know before you make your choice.

Why Install Granite Walls?

Granite is one of the most attractive and durable surfaces that you will be able to find. This amazing natural stone can be found in many different patterns and colors, which makes designing with granite easy. If properly sealed, granite is resistant to water, stains and scratches – making it a perfect choice for interior walls, especially in the shower. You will have to re-seal granite roughly once a year, although this process is very quick and simple. There are even many sealers that you can find in spray bottles. For regular cleaning, all you will need is mild soap and warm water. Between the high-quality looks, durability and easy maintenance of the stone, granite walls are a great option for homes.

Granite Slab Walls vs. Granite Tile Walls: Which is the Better Option?

Whether you choose a granite slab or granite tile for your interior walls, both will make a positive visual impact in the space. If you want to go for a look that is particularly striking, try choosing a granite slab for your shower walls. As mentioned, not only is granite one of the most attractive materials you can use for an interior wall, but it is also one of the strongest. Granite will hold tough against the moisture and water that is produced by the shower and the bathroom in general. While some other natural stones may have stylish looks, not every stone will be able to withstand the elements of the shower the way that granite can. Keep in mind that, while granite is resistant to liquid damages, you will need to make sure it is properly sealed to keep it this way. If you see your granite begin to darken, it might be time to re-seal it. Whether a granite slab or granite tiles are the better option will ultimately be a matter of your personal preference.

There are many great reasons to use granite in the home. From countertops to backsplashes, vanity tops and interior walls, the natural stone will add beauty and functionality to your space. You will also have hundreds of options to choose from in terms of style, so you can let your imagination carry you when searching for granite walls. This guide will help you know more about granite walls and help you decide what granite wall options are best for your home.
