

Quartz That Looks Like Soapstone: Best Types

Table of Contents

What is Quartz?

What is Soapstone?

What Are the Best Quartz Countertops That Look Like Soapstone Countertops?

Cost Comparison: Quartz vs. Soapstone

Quartz and soapstone are two of the most popular high-quality countertop materials on the market. Both countertop options have significant appeal, from their appearance to functional benefits. Choosing either material for a new kitchen countertop, bathroom countertop or other home surface is an excellent decision.

In particular, quartz countertops appeal to many homeowners because of the wide range of available styles. With quartz, you will be able to find virtually any color and style of countertop that you can imagine, from solid colors to significant amounts of veining. This guide will focus on helping you find quartz that looks like soapstone.

What is Quartz?

Quartz is an engineered stone that is created by combining about 90 percent ground natural quartz with around 10 percent polyresin. These exact numbers can differ slightly based on the specific brand (Caesarstone, Silestone, etc.). Although the surfaces are not natural stone, quartz surfaces are among the most desirable for countertops, backsplashes and more. As mentioned, quartz can be found in numerous colors and styles, many of which can imitate the look of natural stones like soapstone. Quartz is also stain resistant and is a low maintenance countertop option. When evaluating your countertop choices, be sure not to confuse quartz with the natural stone quartzite.

What is Soapstone?

Much like quartz, soapstone countertops are also beloved by homeowners. The surfaces come in a range of darker colors like green and gray. If you are looking to match dark kitchen cabinets, soapstone is a terrific choice. Since soapstone is comprised of mostly talc, it is one of the softest materials you can have for a countertop. The surfaces will be smooth to the touch. While you will likely encounter some scratches, these can easily be sanded out. The stone will naturally develop a distinct patina over time, but you can speed up the darkening process by treating the surface with mineral oil. Soapstone countertops, despite being a softer material than many other options, are very durable.

What Are the Best Quartz Countertops That Look Like Soapstone Countertops?

As mentioned above, quartz can mimic the look of soapstone and other natural materials. The quartz countertops below are your best options when it comes to finding a surface that resembles soapstone countertops.

5003 Piatra Grey Caesarstone Quartz

The dark background with white veining makes 5003 Piatra Grey Caesarstone quartz one of your best options for quartz that looks like soapstone.

Copacabana Quartz

Copacabana quartz is a beautiful surface that will give you the soft grey look of soapstone with the benefits of quartz.

Coastal Grey Pental Quartz

This terrific dark grey quartz is a great alternative to soapstone.

4120 Raven Caesarstone Quartz

If you are looking for a type of quartz that has a similar coloring to soapstone, consider this material for your home remodeling project.

Best Quartz That Looks Like Soapstone

5003 Piatra Grey Caesarstone quartz
Copacabana quartz
Coastal Grey Pental quartz
4120 Raven Caesarstone quartz

Cost Comparison: Quartz vs. Soapstone

The table below compares the average costs of quartz and soapstone.

Average Cost: Quartz vs. Soapstone

Quartz	Between $50 to $120 per square foot
Soapstone	Between $55 to $100 per square foot

Whether it is a kitchen remodel or installing a new surface in another room, quartz and soapstone are both great options. If you have decided on quartz, but enjoy the look of soapstone, the options above will be the perfect solution for a beautiful new countertop or backsplash.